LAW & ORDER

Surrogate mom says sex voided contract

CENTRAL ISLIP, N.Y. (AP) — It started out as a pretty straightforward surrogacy contract. Then somebody suggested they skip the artificial insemination bit and do it the old-fashioned way. In a motel room, no less, complete with mirrors, gel-bed and a porno flick on the television.

Surrogate mom Susan Chamberlain says the sex voided her $25,000 deal with Joseph and Jean Kaplan, and she is suing for custody of the son she bore in May. The Kaplans say a deal's a deal.

The whole lurid story has been unfolding in a Long Island courtroom for the past two weeks while a judge tries to sort out who should get custody of the baby, called Shane by Chamberlain and Benjamin by the Kaplans.

Chamberlain has temporary custody. The boy is being cared for by her husband, Tom, at their Bath, Pa., home during the nonjury trial. A decision is expected by Sept. 11.

"All she ever wanted was to please them. That was her sole motivation — to help these older people out," Chamberlain's attorney, Robert Gottlieb, said yesterday.

Complicating Family Court Judge David Freundlich's decision is testimony from Chamberlain's own mother that her daughter was promiscuous and drank too much. She recommended the Kaplans get the boy.

It was through her mother that Chamberlain knew 43-year-old Joseph Kaplan and his 50-year-old wife, who is infertile.

They first discussed the possibility of Chamberlain's acting as a surrogate mother in January 1992. They eventually agreed she would be paid $25,000 to be artificially inseminated with Kaplan's sperm and bear a child for the couple.

The Kaplans claim it was Chamberlain who first suggested just having sex with Kaplan, to save time and money. Chamberlain claims Jean Kaplan raised the subject, according to a deposition.

Chamberlain testified that she and Kaplan first had sex at the Commack Motor Inn in June 1992, after dinner and drinks. "It was not all night. It was a couple of hours," she told the Kaplans' attorney in pretrial testimony.

The 25-year-old waitress didn't get pregnant the first time. Kaplan says he couldn't perform, despite the erotic atmosphere. They ended up having sex a total of seven times, including at another motel, then in the Kaplans' own bed. Chamberlain finally conceived in September, after moving into the Kaplans' basement apartment with her three children.

She testified yesterday that she regretted sleeping with Kaplan. At the couple's request, Chamberlain said, she did not tell her husband about the sex.

Chamberlain said she also became annoyed when Jean Kaplan referred to the fetus as "my baby." Her bad feelings toward the Kaplans intensified when they didn't visit her doctor to hear the baby's heartbeat, she said.

Four months into the pregnancy, Mrs. Chamberlain testified, she decided, "It's not your baby — it's my baby."

The Kaplans' attorney alleges that Chamberlain is just hoping to cash in on all the publicity with a book deal.

"If this is sleazy at all," John Ray said, "you can say it cuts two ways."

20 naked zealots pile out of wreck

VINTON, La. (AP) — The devil made them do it. That's what some of the 20 naked Pentecostals packed cheek-to-cheek into a car told police after the vehicle was chased into a tree.

Officers watched in disbelief as the group piled out of the 1990 Pontiac Grand Am after the wreck and began religious chants.

The passengers, relatives from Floydada, Texas, said they were en route to a religious retreat somewhere in Florida, Police Chief Dennis Drouillard said.

He said some passengers said they stripped because their clothes were possessed by the devil.

"Didn't have a stitch of clothes on. I mean, no socks, no underwear, no nothin'," he said. "They didn't say much."

The police stopped the car yesterday after getting a report that the car contained naked people. The driver got out wearing only a towel, but then jumped back in, sped off, and crashed into a tree, police said.

The car was totaled, but the injuries all were minor, Drouillard said.

"I guess when you're packed in that tight, there's not much room to move around," he said. A police officer gave the passengers clothes at the scene.

Drouillard said the group ranged in age from 1 to 65 and included three pregnant women and five children, who were stuffed into the trunk. Driver Sammy Rodriguez and his brother, Danny, said they were Pentecostal preachers, Drouillard said.

Sammy Rodriguez, 29, was held pending an investigation into reckless endangerment of the children. He was booked on suspicion of reckless driving.

Stoneco to pay for drying up citizen's well

By MIKE DOOLEY
of The News-Sentinel

Owners of an Allen County stone quarry must pay to replace a homeowner's well that nearly dried up as a result of their operations, the Department of Natural Resources has ruled.

Yesterday, the DNR ordered owners of Stoneco Inc., 7320 Lower Huntington Road, to pay for the well at the home of John Hensler, 7109 Lower Huntington.

Hensler sought the replacement under terms of the state's water rights law. He said the company's operations had lowered the water table in the area and caused his well to nearly go dry.

The company digs deep pits to quarry stone, and as part of its operation, pumps water from those pits. That pumping naturally lowers the underground water supply from which wells draw their water.

In addition to the cost of the new well, the company also must pay to hook up the new water supply to Hensler's home and an adjacent workshop, the DNR ruled.

City has 60 days to deliberate how to pay for park

By KARLA SCOON
of The News-Sentinel

The Fort Wayne Parks and Recreation Department has 60 days to come up with a plan to pay for the Tah-Cum-Wah Recreational Complex before its owner accepts another offer.

John Shoaff, park board president, said the board will look to City Council, Allen County Council and the private sector to help support the purchase of the complex. Tah-Cum-Wah owner Carl Horn said he wants Tah-Cum-Wah to remain a recreational complex for the city.

He gave the city the additional time during a park board commissioners' meeting yesterday.

Joe Ruffolo, board vice president, said the board's tight budget could not support the purchase of the facility because it has been difficult for the board to meet financial commitments for parks it now operates. He also was concerned about the use of the complex by non-city residents.

"We can no longer afford to be the parks system for Allen County," Ruffolo said.

More than 6,000 area residents use the facilities at Tah-Cum-Wah, 1705 Freeman St. The complex includes baseball diamonds; two gyms where soccer, volleyball and basketball are played; a rental hall; and a restaurant. Horn bought the complex in 1978.

Shoaff said the board would be faced with legal and moral problems by applying city tax dollars to finance a complex that is used by all Allen County residents. He suggested that non-city residents be charged an additional fee to use Tah-Cum-Wah.

"I would like to see a fair use of the facility," he said.

One Allen County resident told board members he also considers himself a resident of Fort Wayne because he lives about a mile outside the city limits. He said it would be unfair to charge him an additional fee because he spends most of his money in Fort Wayne.

Horn said charging a non-city resident fee was "risky."

"I would hate to discriminate against people outside the city," he said.

Horn said he had three other offers to buy the complex. Horn will pass up one offer to give the board the extra time. That buyer was not going to use the complex as a recreational site. The two other potential buyers would continue the recreational services, he said.

Horn said the complex is a break-even business and was his "gift to the community." He said he approached the parks department to buy the complex about five months ago because he was tired, old and spent most of his time in Florida.

Jim Markland, commissioner of the Amateur Softball Association of Allen County, made a plea to the board to buy Tah-Cum-Wah in order to meet the need for more softball diamonds. He said he could bring major softball tournaments to the city if those tournaments could use the complex.

Markland said the city will lose money in the long run if it does not purchase the complex because of the money the tournaments generate. According to ASA statistics, every visiting softball player spends about $66 a day.

Horn said he is essentially giving the city $700,000 by offering a selling price below the property's value. Neither Horn nor Shoaff would reveal the price because the deal has not been completed.

Horn said if the board decides to buy the complex, the deal must be closed by the first of the year for income tax purposes.

In other business, the board agreed to increase rental fees in 1994 for Foellinger Theatre by $50. The fee for non-profit groups will be $450 a day and the fee for others will be $600. The fees were last raised in 1991.

Shoaff said he felt the community's needs should be re-evaluated to determine if parks department-sponsored events at the theater, which are free, should continue.

Casino companies court Democrats

EVANSVILLE (AP) — Well-connected Democrats, including the husband of the state party chief and two former chiefs of staff for Gov. Evan Bayh, are being sought out by casino companies to help them win the state's first riverboat gambling licenses.

The Boonville law firm headed by Michael K. Phillips, the Democratic speaker of the Indiana House of Representatives, also is being courted by a company hoping to secure one of the first riverboat licenses awarded by the members of the Indiana Gaming Commission, yet to be named by Bayh.

D. William Moreau Jr., a partner at the Indianapolis law firm of Bingham Summers Welsh and Spilman who was Bayh's first chief of staff, told the Evansville Courier his firm will represent at least one company — Hollywood Casino Corp., which wants one of five licenses earmarked for the Ohio River.

Moreau, who is one of Bayh's closest friends and advisers, said he may have a visible role but would not personally "represent that company or any other company" in actions before the riverboat commission.

Bayh, an attorney, also worked at Bingham Summers before being elected secretary of state in 1986. He has said his friendships will not affect the commission's work.

Ed DeLaney, a prominent Hoosier Democrat and the husband of Indiana Democratic Chairman Ann DeLaney, told the newspaper he and his firm are working out the details of contracts with riverboat companies.

DeLaney, a partner at the Indianapolis firm of Barnes & Thornburg, said partners have received up to 10 calls from casino-related businesses.

"I am one of the people who may have some involvement, depending on how it works out," DeLaney said.

Ann DeLaney this year succeeded Michael Pannos of Merrillville as the state party chief. Pannos is part of a group seeking a riverboat gambling license for East Chicago.

The 11 riverboat licenses — five for Ohio River communities, five for Lake Michigan ports and one for southern Indiana's Patoka Lake — are expected to be worth tens of millions of dollars annually.

Phillips said he has been contacted by several companies. His firm so far is not engaged with any potential casino operators, "but in the future, who knows — we'll have to see."

G. Frederick Glass, who was Bayh's chief of staff until this summer, said he has ruled out involvement with riverboats, despite being sought by about six companies during his first three weeks in the private sector.

"Because I have been so recently associated with the governor's office and the administration ... I just thought that I should sit this one out," Glass said yesterday. He is a partner at the Indianapolis law firm of Baker & Daniels.

Fred J. Nation, Bayh's press secretary, said the interest by casino companies in hiring politically prominent Democratic attorneys was not unusual.

"It's likely that every major law firm in Indianapolis, Evansville and other potential riverboat cities will represent a gaming firm in this competition," Nation said.

Bayh, meanwhile, still hasn't named the seven gaming commissioners and is finding it difficult to find people without a financial stake in the riverboats.

Bayh must appoint three commissioners from Lake Michigan counties, three from Ohio River counties, and one from outside those two areas.

"The Legislature has made it much harder by requiring that we choose people from the very counties that have financial interests in this," Bayh said.

Aid is on the way for flooded victims

▶ Counties without insurance may be in trouble, though.

TERRE HAUTE (AP) — The process of securing government aid for flood-damaged counties in western and southern Indiana may begin as early as today, but a decision by two counties to pass up federal flood insurance could cost them dearly, officials said.

Gov. Evan Bayh scheduled a morning news conference in Terre Haute before surveying a section of Vigo County that his disaster management aide described as the hardest-hit area of the state. Bayh was to decide whether to ask for a presidential disaster declaration.

Ninety homes on the north side of Terre Haute sustained major damage and 60 others received minor damage from the flash floods brought on by Tuesday's rains, said Jerome Hauer, director of the State Emergency Management Agency.

"Although most of the water has receded, there are couple of areas in north Terre Haute where residents are still pumping water out," Hauer said yesterday.

Storms last night brought a fresh round of heavy rains to the flood-affected areas, but there were no reports of significant new problems.

Fred Nation, Bayh's press secretary, said Clay and Putnam counties could be denied government relief because of their decision not to participate in a federal flood insurance program.

In Clay County, residents of Brazil found their cleanup activities yesterday stymied by a water main break that left the city of 8,000 dry from 4:30 a.m. until 6:30 p.m. Water will have to boil water through Saturday. Low water pressure forced schools and businesses to close.

Video zeroes in on landfill

▶ It urges people to contact public officials and demand a hearing.

By BOB CAYLOR
of The News-Sentinel

New Haven has taken to video in its fight with Chemical Waste Management of Indiana Inc.

For years, people in New Haven have groused about the hazardous waste landfill at 4636 Adams Center Road, which Chemical Waste owns. Almost two years ago, the fight spread into the courts after the city of New Haven tried to annex the landfill site.

Chemical Waste has used commercials and a paid half-hour television program to try to settle public concerns about its facility.

At a meeting of the Fort Wayne Mayor's Committee on Hazardous Waste last night, attorneys for the city of New Haven presented their new video, entitled, "Who Said Life is Fair?"

The 31-minute video concentrates on the zoning decisions that allowed a sanitary landfill — which later became a hazardous-waste landfill — to be placed in Adams Township.

According to the video, in 1973 the city of Fort Wayne had zoning authority over the site of the landfill and refused a request from Amon Brooks to develop it. But in 1974, the zoning authority for the area was transferred to Allen County.

A change in the zoning ordinance — repealed nine weeks after it was inserted — provided the window necessary for Brooks to start a landfill that later became a hazardous waste landfill and was purchased by Chemical Waste Management.

The video urges viewers to contact public officials and demand a public hearing on the proposed expansion of the landfill.

That expansion would include an area more than twice as large as the existing landfill area.

Local officials and Chemical Waste say the state, not local government, holds authority to approve or deny the expansion request.

Chemical Waste Director Doug Clark spoke briefly after the video's debut and said he preferred to let Allen Superior Court Judge Paul Mathias decide whether zoning decisions leading to the creation of the landfill were made properly.

New Haven and Chemical Waste are arguing that question in Mathias' court. Clark did reserve the right to respond to the video in more detail during a future meeting of the mayor's committee.

The city can't afford to buy air time on Fort Wayne television stations, attorney Jim Fenton, who represents New Haven, said. But opponents of the landfill want to play it on public-access television and distribute copies to churches, unions and other community groups.

Agent pleads guilty to ripping off FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) — An FBI agent pleaded guilty to two felonies, admitting he bilked the bureau of almost $18,000 and improperly pressured his estranged wife — also an FBI agent — to recant critical testimony against him.

Eugene A. Bennett entered the guilty pleas before U.S. District Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson yesterday to charges of obstruction of justice and making false monetary claims.

Bennett, who agreed to resign from the FBI, also agreed to a sentence of one year in prison plus a possible fine of up to $500,000 and restitution. He will be sentenced later.

Bennett won a mistrial June 28 after his wife, Marguerite Bennett, a key government witness, startled the court by saying she lied when she testified that her husband had defrauded the bureau.

She later told prosecutors privately that she recanted only because her husband threatened to abduct their children, prosecutors said.

Jackson declared a mistrial after saying her new allegations so overwhelmed her original assertions that it would be impossible for her husband to get a fair trial.

On the fourth day of his retrial yesterday, Bennett admitted giving the FBI a voucher that claimed he was entitled to $17,873 in connection with the sale of a home in Lithonia, Ga., when he knew it was false. He also admitted trying several times to influence his wife's anticipated testimony.

The purported sale of property was to have occurred when the FBI transferred Bennett from Atlanta to Washington.

"Mr. Bennett admitted that the purported transaction was a sham and that no real estate commission was actually incurred," prosecutors from the Justice Department's public integrity section said in a summary of the case.

Bennett became an FBI agent in 1981. He is on leave.

Jackson to alter lyrics that offend

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Jackson will rerecord his single "They Don't Care About Us," minus some offensive lyrics.

"I acknowledge that I seriously offended some people, which was never my intention, and for that I am deeply sorry," Jackson said in a statement yesterday. "I have come to understand over the past days that these words are considered anti-Semitic."

No recall is planned for the 2 million copies of the album "HIStory Past, Present and Future Book 1," which went on sale Tuesday.

Unshipped albums will have stickers with Jackson's apology and a statement that the song containing the lyrics "Jew me" and "kike me" was meant as a protest against racism.

"Do me" and "strike me" will be used as substitutes.

GOOD NEWS: Christopher Reeve got some encouraging news as he works toward getting off a respirator. His doctor said the two phrenic nerves that run from Reeve's neck to his diaphragm to control breathing are intact. "This means he has a very important part of the mechanism to breathe on his own," Dr. John Jane said yesterday. The finding does not alter Reeve's chances for breathing on his own, but confirms that it's possible, Jane said. Reeve was paralyzed from the neck down in a fall during a May 27 horse-riding competition. The 42-year-old star of the "Superman" movies also has developed more sensation in his right shoulder and the left side of his body, Jane said. Reeve was in serious condition at the University of Virginia Medical Center in Charlottesville, Va.

Casper, maid to the Frank and Ethel Gumm home in 1925, recalls the remarkable talent of 3-year-old Frances — later known as Judy Garland — belting out perfect tunes as her mother played piano in this house.

LITTLE LADDIE: Liam Neeson and his actress-wife Natasha Richardson have produced a little Irish laddie. Micheal Richard Antonio Neeson was born yesterday at a Dublin hospital. Both baby and mother were doing well, said their publicist, Susan Culley. "The reason he was born in Dublin is because Liam is working on a film called the Michael Collin project" about a founder of the Irish Republican Army. Neeson 43, starred in "Schindler's List" and "Rob Roy."

This caboose-lover still laments the end of the end of the train

Nancy Nall
Telling Tales

Admit it. When you're at the front of the line of cars being stopped by the train, and the engine goes past, and the engineer waves at you, you always wave back, don't you?

I do. I'm not so old and jaded I can't lighten a railroader's day with a happy how-ya-doin'. Even though, from the looks of the wave they give, I'm the recipient of one of a thousand waves they'll deliver in the course of a shift; it must be in their contract.

Once upon a time, a train was a two-wave deal. You waved to the engineer, and then got another from the person in the caboose.

The caboose wave was generally happier, and sometimes even came with a smile. I always got the impression the caboose guys (they were always guys) were off-duty. They certainly didn't seem to be steering anything, or stoking an engine, or even watching a gauge. In the caboose, it's always Miller Time.

Now, of course, the caboose is long gone. For about a decade now, they've been replaced by a simple flashing thingamabob attached to the last car in the train.

It turns out those guys in the caboose weren't off-duty, they were catching up on paperwork, or performing "visual monitoring" of various train and track functions (perhaps watching to see whether the new cars on the flatcars were falling by the trackside). Those tasks can now be performed by sensors and other devices monitored by computers. Paperwork can be done at the end of the line.

So goodbye caboose and hello "end-of-train device." No kidding, that's really what they call it. A railroad spokesman confirmed it.

Unlike many columnists, I don't get all goopy about trains. I still think they're a tremendous way to travel, but the rest of the time, I don't give them much thought unless I'm waiting for one to clear the intersection.

I was raised in a city and am no huge fan of country music, hence the lonesome whistle's whine holds no poignance, promise or metaphor. Show me a railroad enthusiast, and I'll show you a stamp collect in a silly hat.

But I still miss the caboose.

It satisfies a certain sense of structure — beginning, middle, end. People, freight, people. Wave, watch boxcars wave. You put your car in gear when you saw the caboose coming, rolling along in all its comical boxiness.

Now you just look for the empty space after the last car. A train with no caboose is a sentence with no period. No one smiles at the end-of-train device.

The loss of the caboose doesn't rank up there with societal tragedies, but it reminds me of an observation a television critic I like made about telephones: Hanging up a telephone is an easy shorthand gesture in drama. It communicates volumes to the audience, the way an actor chooses to either rattle the receiver back onto the hook in obvious distress, place it thoughtfully back on the cradle or slam it down in fury.

Now, he said, so many characters in movies and TV talk on cellular phones, and the gesture of stabbing the "end" button with a finger or pushing the antenna back into the phone just doesn't have the resonance the old hang-ups do. We have to learn a different body language for the wireless age.

The caboose spoke the same sort of shorthand — "the end," to be exact. It's a synonym for a person's rear end, or the last in the line. I'm the baby of our family, the youngest child. Whenever I walked into a room, my grandmother would crow, "And here's the caboose!"

Sorry. "End-of-train device" just doesn't have the same ring to it.

No recall is planned for the 2,million copies of the album "HIStory Past, Present and Future Book 1," which went on sale Tuesday.

Unshipped albums will have stickers with Jackson's apology and a statement that the song containing the lyrics "Jew me" and "kike me" was meant as a protest against racism.

"Do me" and "strike me" will be used as substitutes.

GOOD NEWS: Christopher Reeve got some encouraging news as he works toward getting off a respirator. His doctor said the two phrenic nerves that run from Reeve's neck to his diaphragm to control breathing are intact. "This means he has a very important part of the mechanism to breathe on his own," Dr. John Jane said yesterday. The finding does not alter Reeve's chances for breathing on his own, but confirms that it's possible, Jane said. Reeve was paralyzed from the neck down in a fall during a May 27 horse-riding competition. The 42-year-old star of the "Superman" movies also has developed more sensation in his right shoulder and the left side of his body, Jane said. Reeve was in serious condition at the University of Virginia Medical Center in Charlottesville, Va.

This caboose-lover still laments the end of the end of the train

Nancy Nall
Telling Tales

Admit it. When you're at the front of the line of cars being stopped by the train, and the engine goes past, and the engineer waves at you, you always wave back, don't you?

I do. I'm not so old and jaded I can't lighten a railroader's day with a happy how-ya-doin'. Even though, from the looks of the wave they give, I'm the recipient of one of a thousand waves they'll deliver in the course of a shift; it must be in their contract.

Once upon a time, a train was a two-wave deal. You waved to the engineer, and then got another from the person in the caboose.

The caboose wave was generally happier, and sometimes even came with a smile. I always got the impression the caboose guys (they were always guys) were off-duty. They certainly didn't seem to be steering anything, or stoking an engine, or even watching a gauge. In the caboose, it's always Miller Time.

Now, of course, the caboose is long gone. For about a decade now, they've been replaced by a simple flashing thingamabob attached to the last car in the train.

It turns out those guys in the caboose weren't off-duty, they were catching up on paperwork, or performing "visual monitoring" of various train and track functions (perhaps watching to see whether the new cars on the flatcars were falling by the trackside). Those tasks can now be performed by sensors and other devices monitored by computers. Paperwork can be done at the end of the line.

So goodbye caboose and hello "end-of-train device." No kidding, that's really what they call it. A railroad spokesman confirmed it.

Unlike many columnists, I don't get all goopy about trains. I still think they're a tremendous way to travel, but the rest of the time, I don't give them much thought unless I'm waiting for one to clear me a railroad enthusiast, and I'll show you a stamp collect in a silly hat.

But I still miss the caboose.

It satisfies a certain sense of structure — beginning, middle, end. People, freight, people. Wave, watch boxcars wave. You put your car in gear when you saw the caboose coming, rolling along i all its comical boxiness.

Now you just look for the empty space after the last car A train with no caboose is a sentence with no period. No one smiles at the end-of-train device.

The loss of the caboose doesn't rank up there with societal tragedies, but it reminds me of an ob servation a television critic I like made about telephones: Hanging up a telephone is an easy shorthand gesture in drama. It communicates volumes to the audience, the way an actor chooses to either rattle the receiver back onto the hook in obvious distress, place it thoughtfully back on the cradle o slam it down in fury.

Now, he said, so many characters in movies and TV talk on cellular phones, and the gesture of stab bing the "end" button with a finger or pushing the antenna back into the phone just doesn't have the resonance the old hang-ups do. We have to learn a different body language for the wireless age.

The caboose spoke the same sort of shorthand — "the end," to be exact. It's a synonym for a person's rear end, or the last in the line. I'm the baby of our family, the youngest child. Whenever I walked into a room, my grandmother would crow, "And here's the caboose!"

Investigators said a small explosion caused by moisture in the furnace ruptured a water line, dousing the molten metal with a larger amount of water and triggering a larger blast.

The gray-iron foundry's melting system pulls molten steel into water-cooled troughs, officials said. Jerry Hetrick, a company spokesman, said some of that steel somehow spilled from a trough, bringing it into contact with water.

Plant personnel and Indiana Occupational Safety and Health Administration investigators spent yesterday looking for an explanation for the accident.

"For it to cause something like this, (the moisture) would have to get underneath the iron," Hirsch said. "Water on top would just cause steam; it would boil away."

Anytime a death occurs or three or more employees are injured in a single incident, the company must call in IOSHA officials to investigate it as a "catastrophe," said David Bear, deputy commissioner of the Indiana Department of Labor, the agency that oversees IOSHA.

IOSHA investigators were last called to ▶ Hospital emergency plans: How well did they work? 4A

By JOHN McGAULEY
of The News-Sentinel

By early afternoon yesterday, things were finally settling down in St. Joseph Medical Center's Regional Burn Center.

But for the barely conscious iron workers who'd arrived in the burn center hours earlier — swathed like mummies and breathing with the help of machines — months of painful, perhaps life-threatening, complications and rehabilitation were only beginning.

Victims of the pre-dawn explosion yesterday at Dalton Foundries in Warsaw, the men remained heavily sedated while doctors worked to stabilize them and began treatment of their burns.

McMillen educators teaching health awareness to Wildcats

By LISA RAMIREZ
of The News-Sentinel

Eight-year-old Kyle Wynn threw a ball at a Velcro wall with the shape of a baseball diamond on it.

After it landed on the double area, McMillen health educator Cheryl Turner took a question from the double category and asked Wynn his question.

"A cigarette contains 2,000 chemicals in it. True or false?"

The boy wriggled his face and looked around before answering "true."

"Do you think he's right?" Turner asked his teammates.

"Yes," they shouted in unison, agreeing with the correct response.

"Nicotine in pure form is a poison," Turner explained to the young group of Wildcat baseb players while picking up a can of bug spray.

"Nicotine is in bug spray," she said. "Wo
you guys let me spray bug spray in your mout
Because that's what people do every time t smoke a cigarette."

Turner gave the presentation yesterday to
